- A highly contemporary novel, featuring the kind of military designer drugs rumoured to be used in the Gulf Wars
- Crossover crime/SF appeal – rave reviews in the UK's three leading SF websites as well as three top crime websites
- Sue Rann is a powerhouse on the publicity front and building a growing network of fans

Wolf, a vagrant pavement artist on the streets of Amsterdam. He remembers nothing before the hospital where he was treated for gunshot wounds. The police want to talk to him; sinister men in black are on his trail. He has to find a way into his mysterious past before his ignorance kills him. But can he trust the cynical stranger he sees in his mirror?

Robin Carlson, 30-something rebellious daughter of a US general, she has a do-it-my-way attitude... and a Glock-17 for a security blanket. She dreams of becoming an artist, and obsesses guiltily about feeding pizza to her goldfish. Stranded in Amsterdam, she puts her military training to use as a part-time bouncer in the city's nightclubs. People are going missing. Robin's desperate bid to help her on-again off-again boyfriend catapults her into the murky world of illegal designer drugs. Wolf follows his heart and blunders into deep trouble. Robin and Wolf: their paths are going to cross. But can they survive the Nemesis Project?

"...A taut thriller that will leave you in fear of the future..." - Daily Mirror

"...A brilliant thriller that's exciting, hip and alarmingly topical, conjuring up a world where blue liquids and Black Ops converge. Read it now, because before long you'll be reading about it for real in the newspapers..." - Richard Shephard, Waterstones Online

"...Sue Rann...I thoroughly enjoyed 'Looking For Mr Nobody', and I hope she sells millions...." - Chris Tarrant

Sue Rann was born in Stafford, England, in 1964. At the age of seven, she announced her intention of becoming an author and spent the next thirty years having a life instead. Her string of odd jobs included stagehand, graphic artist and spotlight operator. After a stint in rural North Wales, she moved with her family to Holmfirth, West Yorkshire, home of 'Last of the Summer Wine', where they now live. 'Looking For Mr. Nobody' is her first crime novel; she also writes Sci-Fi under the pseudonym 'Mercy Falconer'.
