THE ARMAGEDDON TRADE

CLEM CHAMBERS

NEW TITLE

'It captures the nature of the traders behind the foolishness and greed stalking the financial markets' - Alex Brummer, City Editor, Daily Mail

'A digital-age John Le Carré' - Ted Greenwald, Senior Editor, Wired Magazine

'At last, a book where the words finance and thriller truly belong in the same sentence' - Steve Eckett, co-founder of Global Investor Bookshops and Harriman House

'A spell-binding look, by a market master' - Richard L. Hudson, Former Editor of The Wall Street Journal Europe, author of The Misbehaviour of Markets

'More shocking than a squirt of lemon juice in the eye'

- Sally Nicoll, author of 'Bets and the City'

'Terrifying' - Geoff Cutmore, CNBC Anchor

MARKETING:

- With the world's financial markets in chaos, is this fiction or future fact?
- Perfect for the Stephen Frey / Michael Ridpath / Joseph Finder market
- Author appearance at Theakston's Old Peculiar Crime Writing Festival in Harrogate, 23 – 26 July 2009, (tbc)

DESCRIPTION:

Jim is the cockney boy wonder who can read stock charts like 50 ft road signs. His uncanny talent has taken him from tea boy to trading superstar. Is he a genius, or a fluke? He doesn't know.

The mysterious Max Davas, emperor of trading, makes billions dealing US Treasuries using more computing firepower than NASA. - but now his models are telling him that something is about to go catastrophically wrong.

The same trading system that has made him one of the richest and most powerful men in the world is telling him that in a year's time, Gold will be at $0 an ounce, so will Oil, so will Microsoft and the dollar won't be trading at all. The Euro, the Pound, the Yen, sugar, wheat, coffee...all will fall down to zero.

But are predictions fate? Or does the cockney kid hold the key to the Armageddon trade?
